

Reading the 1897 Census

Russia “How to” Guide, Intermediate Level: Instruction

November 2020

GOAL

This guide will teach you how to read an 1897 Russian Empire Census record for your ancestor.

INTRODUCTION

The 1897 Russian Imperial Census was the first and only census carried out in the Russian Empire. The census enumerated the entire population of the Empire (excluding Finland), but after statistical data was gathered, many of the census returns were destroyed. Use sites such as The Archival Fonds of the First Russian Empire Census of 1897 and the Metric's Inventory of the 1897 Census To determine if original census returns exist for your ancestor's area. Original census returns are written in Russian, although you may come across documents written in other languages common in the Russian Empire.

As the documents are in Russian, you may want to consult the following “How to” Guides before continuing:

- The Russian Alphabet
- Deciphering the Handwriting and Understanding the Grammar

HOW TO

The census consists of three different types of forms – A (A) for peasant farms, Б (B) for private farms, and В (V) for urban dwellers. Each variation consists of a cover page listing information about the location and the number of individuals within the household. Examples of forms can be found on the Russia Census page on the FamilySearch Wiki.

CENSUS RETURNS

Regardless of which form is used, the census questionnaire for each household looks the same. Below you will find translations of the column headings. Note that each column has a number above it. Find that number in this “How to” Guide to learn more about each column and find examples from real documents of vocabulary and information commonly found in each column. Keep in mind that this guide is not a comprehensive list of all of the possible vocabulary you may encounter in a census return. For additional vocabulary commonly found in genealogical documents, please see the Russian Genealogical Word List.
